I purchased my rainbow rune set from a local store and, upon opening the bag, I did discover that the set did not have what is labeled as "watermelon crystal", according to this site's product description. I write this review to aid others and to inform them of the stones that are actually in this set. While I do love this set - it has a joyful, happy feel to it - my disappointment comes from it not being as diversified as it could be. Lo Scarabeo already manufactures green aventurine and hematite runes. To include them in this set is a bit redundant and detracts from the diversity from the rest of the set, which includes white jade, cherry quartz, and yellow/honey calcite. And to label one of the stones in the mix as "watermelon crystal" is quite misleading. For starters, watermelon crystal does not exist. Watermelon tourmaline does but not watermelon crystal. Watermelon tourmaline is also quite expensive and would raise the cost of this rune set considerably. Watermelon tourmaline is also very brittle and would not survive being cast and "shuffled" in a bag with a heavy stone such as hematite. And watermelon tourmaline has different properties compared to the yellow/honey calcite. Still, I would recommend this rune set to people who want to buy one but aren't sure of where to start. This set does include hematite, which is good for grounding. Green Aventurine is good for growth, renewal and creativity. The other three stones, well, I do need to explore them and their energy applications mixed with the rune energy. Overall, as I said, it is a happy set and does promote within one a sense of joy and harmony. It's simply lacks a better variety of stones and crystals and has one part of the set mislabeled as something it isn't.

I just got these today, and I'm really impressed. All of the stones are carved flat, and will be great for throwing. The only thing I'm curious about is the product description. It says that there is watermelon crystal included, but instead, my set came with a tan colored stone that I have yet to identify. Still a great set though. I would buy them again for a gift.
