PreSchool-Grade 1â “Saddened by events in the news, Williams pours out lyrics to express his feelings on peace. "On the street,/when you meet,/when you eat,â /talk peace." This is a difficult concept to convey to a young audience, and the writing is unremarkable. Even the attractive illustrations, which are colorful and primitive in appearance, do little to enhance the abstract message. On the other hand, the circular tops of the trees and the rounded bodies on bears give some mellowness to the vague idea. The large-print, red text uses words that most first graders will recognize. However, with the spate of books on peace lately, including Vladimir Radunsky's What Does Peace Feel Like? (S & S, 2004) and Todd Parr's The Peace Book (Little, Brown, 2004), libraries probably don't need this one.â “Blair Christolon, Prince William Public Library System, Manassas, VA Copyright Â© Reed Business Information, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. Author: Sam Williams is a popular author and illustrator for the very young. One of his most recent books, Cold Little Duck, Duck, Duck, has met with great acclaim, reviews and sales in the US and UK. Sam is married with three children and a host of other animal life! Illustrator: Mique grew up mostly in London, although her most memorable childhood years were spent in Japan, during the ages of 7-10. She studied at Norwich School of Art & Design, then completed a masters at University of Brighton, during which time she became very interested in children's books. --This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

This book is just okay. I love the message but it just does not flow at all. It starts out with a nice inspiring rhyme and then seems very choppy, stops rhyming, and the pattern changes! It is terrible, a great message, but written poorly. I would send it back but I feel that is wrong, it is a risk you take when buying a book I guess.

We have read and reread this book so many times we have literally had to mend it so many times. It is beautifully written with a wonderful beat. I love the message and always love when the kids pick this book out.
