

The book was found

Buddha Boy (Bccb Blue Ribbon Fiction Books (Awards))

Synopsis

How to survive being good Like a flashback memory, heâ™s there in my mind: skimming up the stairs at school, his sloppy old T-shirt big as a sail, red tie-dyed dragon T-shirt, who wears stuff like that? No one. Jinsen. The kids at Edward Rucher High School call Jinsen âœBuddha Boyâ• and condemn him as a freak. With his shaved head and perpetual smile, Jinsen certainly doesnâ™t help matters when he starts begging for lunch money in the cafeteria. So when Justin is paired with Jinsen for a class project, he plans to get done with it as soon as possible, and climb right back into his safe social niche. Then Justin discovers Jinsenâ™s incredible artistic talent and becomes curious about his beliefs. But being friends with Buddha Boy isnâ™t simple, and Justin is forced into a cruel contest with the jocks who just canâ™t seem to leave Jinsen, or his artwork, alone. Kathe Koja introduces an unforgettable young man who will remind readers of the true meaning of friendship and demonstrate how to draw strength from the little gods inside each of them.

Book Information

Series: Bccb Blue Ribbon Fiction Books (Awards)

Hardcover: 128 pages

Publisher: Farrar, Straus and Giroux (BYR); 1st edition (March 4, 2003)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 0374309981

ASIN: B003STCMVU

Product Dimensions: 8.5 x 5.8 x 0.6 inches

Shipping Weight: 10.4 ounces

Average Customer Review: 4.1 out of 5 stars 35 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #6,389,370 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #56 inÂ Books > Teens >

Literature & Fiction > Religious > Other #343 inÂ Books > Teens > Literature & Fiction > Art &

Architecture #1107 inÂ Books > Teens > Literature & Fiction > Social & Family Issues > Physical & Emotional Abuse

Customer Reviews

Grade 7-10-Justin-an "average" kid-serves as the interface between readers (and to some extent his schoolmates) and Michael Martin, aka Buddha Boy, whose Buddhist teacher named him Jinsen, "fountain of God." Justin mostly wants to pass through high school unnoticed (beneath the notice of the school's "royalty"), doing his work and enjoying his friends. He is fortunate to have supportive, albeit divorced, parents-another facet of the novel that sets it apart in a field full of useless adults.

But Justin is stirred out of his camouflage by the animosity that the new kid incites, quite unintentionally, simply by being different. Both irritated and intrigued by Jinsen's apparent imperturbability to his tormentors, Justin is also astonished by Jinsen's artistic abilities. Koja flawlessly walks a tightrope in her presentation of Jinsen-devout without being sanctimonious, insufferable, or simply unbelievable-and solidly nails the small-minded, fearful, and even paranoid mind-set that dominates the high school milieu. Like Chris Crutcher and Chris Lynch, the author is deeply concerned with the psychological motivations for behavior and the belief that explicable causes generally underlie what may seem to be inexplicable actions. At the heart of her story is a deeply religious character who is neither naive nor clownish, neither self-righteous nor pitiful. Buddha Boy has a whole lot of action compressed into a short time span, but Koja admirably refuses to yield to melodramatic writing or black-and-white solutions. Quickly paced, inviting, and eye-opening, this is a marvelous addition to YA literature. Coop Renner, Blackshear Elementary School, Austin, TX Copyright 2003 Reed Business Information, Inc.

Gr. 6-10. No one in the rich, suburban high school likes the weird new kid who looks like a Buddhist monk and begs at lunch. But Justin is drawn to the stranger and defends him against vicious school bullies. Koja's short novel is openly preachy, and the packed plot is absurdly contrived: the saintly outsider turns out to be an amazingly gifted artist who was once a delinquent as violent as the school bullies--until his parents died and he went catatonic and a Buddhist art teacher showed him how to find truth and beauty in art and religion . . . It's the simple writing, along with Justin's informal first-person narrative, that will draw readers to the crucial ethical issues, especially "the social-status in-out thing" among the kids, and the way school authorities accept it. Then there's the elemental question of how hard it is to do the right thing, and to keep on doing it. "We're all gods inside, right? Karma, right?" Teens will find much to talk about here. Hazel Rochman Copyright © American Library Association. All rights reserved

Good narrator. It was a ya story that addressed bullying and how we participate in bullying culture, whether you're the bully or the bystander who never steps in. Its a bit cishet and white, the only inclusion is possible hints to buddhism from the new kid, but as a lover of ya, it wa good storytelling, I just would've loved more inclusion.

I am always on the lookout for children's and Young Adult books that introduce Buddhism and related spiritual themes in an accessible way, so that is how I happened upon this one (and I'm glad

I did.) This slim novel (117 pages) centers around high schooler Justin and his initially reluctant friendship with 'new kid' Jinsen, who begs at lunch for food, wears old clothes, smiles all the time no matter what, and is widely derided as a 'freak' amongst the high school population. Jinsen's incredible artistic talents intrigue Justin however, and as he gradually gets to know him better, he comes to appreciate Jinsen's profound spiritual values. The plot centers around others' treatment of Jinsen, and Justin's struggles to decide how or if he should try and help. It's very readable, and the high school environment and emotional struggles of the characters felt real to me. Although it touches on spiritual themes, the author does so with a light touch - the book isn't pedantic or preachy. Most of the themes come up in brief bits of conversations between Justin and Jinsen, or in the narrative added by Justin, who is telling the story in first person. On the plus side, this keeps the spiritual undertones from overwhelming the story or characters, but it also limits the amount of information we get regarding Buddhism. As someone who has studied Buddhism extensively, some of the statements regarding the Four Noble Truths, karma, and 'gods' (a word some Buddhist are very uncomfortable with) didn't resonate exactly right for me. I wasn't wild about Jinsen begging for his lunch either, as it seemed to play into certain stereotypes regarding Buddhism. But there are many branches of Buddhism, and so many interpretations, and as long as this book isn't read as a treatise on Buddhism, I think it is good. Certainly anything that gets tweens and teenagers thinking about tolerance and spirituality is a good thing in my view!

I am reviewing this on behalf of my teen who is entering high school. This was a requirement as part of an English course. According to her the book lacked interest and therefore was difficult to "get into" especially, to a teenager of this age. She didn't think the book was bad, but has read better. She also was thankful that the book was very short (about 14 chapters). The book seemed appealing to me, however, I did not read it, so I can only make comments based on her experience.

Great 9th grade summer read!

It's a good book, it came in the same condition I expected it in.

School assignment she actually didn't mind

Great book for kids to read.

I purchased this book to read with my 13 year old students and while it started out OK, nothing happened to keep their (or my) interest.

Download to continue reading...

The Curse of the Pharaohs : My Adventures with Mummies (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) Buddha Boy (Bccb Blue Ribbon Fiction Books (Awards)) Thunder Boy Jr. (Bccb Blue Ribbon Picture Book Awards (Awards)) The Worm Family (Bccb Blue Ribbon Picture Book Awards (Awards)) Hitler's Daughter (Bccb Blue Ribbon Fiction Books (Awards)) Strange Mr. Satie (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) John Lennon: All I Want is the Truth (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) The Boys Who Challenged Hitler: Knud Pedersen and the Churchill Club (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) Most Dangerous: Daniel Ellsberg and the Secret History of the Vietnam War (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) Runaway Girl: The Artist Louise Bourgeois (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) Oregon Blue-Ribbon Fly Fishing Guide (Blue-Ribbon Fly Fishing Guides) The Complete Photo Guide to Ribbon Crafts: *All You Need to Know to Craft with Ribbon *The Essential Reference for Novice and Expert Ribbon Crafters ... Instructions for Over 100 Projects The Complete Photo Guide to Ribbon Crafts: *All You Need to Know to Craft with Ribbon *The Essential Reference for Novice and Expert Ribbon Crafters *Packed ... Instructions for Over 100 Projects Buddha's Belly : Recipes For An Enlightened Mind: Mindful and Healthy Eating Based on Buddha's Diet Philosophy. Asian Vegetarian Cookbook Meals to Connect ... Your Inner Soul (Buddha's Belly Series 1) The Darwin Awards: Evolution in Action (Darwin Awards (Plume Books)) Clio Awards: The 42nd Annual Awards Competition, 2001 Swimming to Antarctica: Tales of a Long-Distance Swimmer (Alex Awards (Awards)) FIREBOAT: The Heroic Adventures of the John J. Harvey (Boston Globe-Horn Book Awards (Awards)) Mr. Tiger Goes Wild (Boston Globe-Horn Book Awards (Awards)) Code Name Verity (Edgar Allen Poe Awards. Best Young Adult (Awards))

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help